

Indiana's telephone privacy law has been great for the people of Indiana. My wife and I were sick and tired of the constant barrage of unsolicited phone calls we were getting, either trying to sell a product or asking for money. Before Indiana's law we got 10 to 20 calls a week, and since its enactment, we hardly ever get one. It once again is a pleasure to sit in our home in the evening since these calls have stopped. We think it is important that the state of Indiana be able to control unsolicited calls for its people, and their efforts should not be overridden and watered down by any proposal from the FCC.
